"Synagogue of Satan": Uniting Extremist Groups in the Revival of an Antisemitic Label Online

The Network Contagion Research Institute (NCRI) and the Combat Antisemitism Movement (CAM) released a first-ever report demonstrating how online incitement against Jews and Jewish targets directly correlates with actual physical attacks.

The study examined the spatial signature of tweets containing the "Synagogue of Satan" term in the U.S. on the county level, which showed that the term significantly correlates with synagogue incidents, an effect that remains robust even when controlling for population.

Dozens of Members of Congress Rally for Jewish American Heritage Month on Capitol Hill

At the U.S. Capitol building, CAM hosted a breakfast for U.S. senators, representatives, and staff to acknowledge Jewish American Heritage Month (JAHM).

Fourteen senators and representatives gave remarks, and more than a dozen other congressional offices were represented from both sides of the aisle.

In addition to a discussion on the security challenges posed by modern-day antisemitism, a panel was also held on the importance of implementing the IHRA Working Definition of Antisemitism.

Study: Holocaust Education Reduces Hate Crimes Against Minority Communities

A study by RealityCheck Research - a new nonprofit based in New York, Tel Aviv, and London - found that mandated Holocaust education in U.S. schools reduces hate crimes against Jews, as well as across a wide swath of minority communities.

The study found that hate crimes against Black communities went down more than 55% in states with Holocaust education laws, while antisemitic crimes dropped 54.8%. Those states also saw drops in hate crimes against Muslims (24%), LGBTQ people (43%), Latinos (34%) and Asian Americans (13%).
